

LAMIIRAN

A storied descendant tribe of Humanity, the Lamiirans were once enslaved by a race of now-extinct elves. It is said that the ancient Lamiirans discovered a power called the Heart of Winter which granted them incredible magic allowing them to destroy their oppressors. After this rebellion, those who discovered the Heart of Winter became the royal class of a new kingdom followed zealously by millions of newly freed people looking to fill the void of power left behind by their former slave masters. From the ivory fortresses of their dead oppressors the Lamiiran royalty perpetuated over one-thousand conflicts, big and small until the final one, the Ruination, ended their conquest forever.

Physical Description

The Lamiiran Tribe consists of peoples of an average, humanoid description with skin tones ranging from peachy pink to dark brown. Hair grows from the head, face and in patches all across the body that can appear black, brown, blonde, auburn any anywhere in between. Lamiirans are commonly seen wearing wide, colorful cloth sashes, each uniquely decorated. The color and ornamentation denoting social status or military rank.

MILITANT BLOODLINE

GOTHRIN
Another divergent of the Human race, this culture is said to have spawned directly from the god-ascendant Ronash, the diety of change and transformation. The legend states that right at the dawn of the Age of Light roughly 3,000 years ago Ronash magically cloned himself for an unknown (and unknowable) task. These clones did not retain Ronash's deific status but they were clearly not simply human anymore either. Eventually this new evolution of humanity was placed upon Hidra Allath to live among the other mortal races where they developed an interest in magical study archiving their various discoveries and inventions in the black towers they became known for.

Physical Description
The Gothrin people are the taller and leaner of the two remaining branches of humanity. They are further differentiated from their human ancestry by their extreme pale skin that is sometimes tinged blue, green or purple. Gothrin also sport colored sclera with pale irises; a strange inversion of the typical human eye colorations. Traditionally they shave their entire bodies smooth but many can't maintain this tradition while traveling the wilds.

MAZMERI
An illusive faction of gnomish descendants whos ancestors built technological marvels centuries beyond the capabilities of the other tribes of the Mortal Races. When faced with the possibility of being invaded by their Lamiiran neighbors to the south they pooled together their advanced machinery to build five "Flying Cities" unified by Zyzimar, a sentient construct that could coordinate the hulking stations in battle if the need arose. The Mazmeri survived the horrors of the Ruination via these Flying Cities, fleeing to Inuva on their last vessel, B'taam. In this new age, Zyzimar is seen as a god by the Mazmeri and the ancestral technology is misunderstood as mystical and divine.

Physical Description
Short in stature and typically hairy. They retain many of the physiological features inherent to their gnomish ancestry, however Mazmeri are more stocky and thick in the chest, face, and arms. They are a long lived and storied people and therefore have a diverse array of modern styles of dress and outward presentations. It is common to see Mazmeri dressed in full-coverage drab robes and head wraps alongsize others with bright, gold-adorned suits.

SOLAR ELF

After thousands of generations of adaptation, experimentation and environmental changes the ancient race known as the elves splintered off into multiple subspecies that grew into their own separate and powerful nations. Elves as a species are extremely magic-sensitive, their physical forms absorb and embody the raw elemental energies of the universe in ways that other Mortal Races do not seem to. Solar elves were born from elemental fire, viewing Pyromancy and flame as the energy of creation; Some clans going so far as to call it divine. They survived the Ruination though sheer force of will and have explored the farthest south into the volcanic mountains of Inuva which they now call home.

Physical Description

Extremely tall and slender with skin colors ranging from hot pink to blood red. Their hair and facial hair typically grow upwards and in tendril-like clumps, although these are combed out or tied together when one wishes to appear formal or refined. They sport the pointed ears and longer limbs that their elven ancestry entails but unlike them, the Solar Elves have thicker hair and brows and eyes that glow like fire that appear in every shade of yellow and red.

DYNE
In the dreaded days of the apocalyptic past they were called names such as, "The Swarm", "The Hive", or "The Plague."
Their true name is Dyne, meaning "Loyal" in their ancient tongue. Whichever battlefield they were sent to was always left a bloodstained, bone-strewn mess of broken metal and screams. When the annihilation that came to the old world destroyed their subterranean kingdom and buried their queen they slowly regained their individuality and freedom. It is said that Dyne looking for a new, peaceful beginning established a the first Dyne city somewhere in the new continent

Physical Description
The Dyne are a tribe of hulking insectoid creatures that resemble beetles that walk bipedally. Their chitinous shells can be any color in the spectrum but usually tend to be more earth-toned. All of them have a metallic or iridescent shine. The Dyne sport large horns of varying shape on their heads. They are known to decorate their horns with banners, ribbons, fine fabrics, plants, or even the remains of their enemies if they tend toward a life of battle.

URANURA

A mysterious and almost alien race of amphibious frogmen that hail from an island just off of the coast of Solar Elven territory that is nothing but a massive swamp from shore to shore. Their home was destroyed and occupied by the first horde of the Dyne army in a war that lasted 22 years- the longest any single area ever held out under Dyne invasion. The Ruination destroyed the last of their civilization that the Dyne left intact forcing the Uranura to become nomadic, many leveraging their physical power and history of warfare to become well-paid mercenaries in the ashen wastes. Now, in Inuva they do much the same in exchange for shelter, food or resources.

Physical Description

Towering creatures with very short, rounded heads that seem to just be a continuation of their huge shoulders. Their heads are flanked on both sides by large cheek pouches that can be inflated changing their color and creating a haunting, vibrating sound. Their skin appears slick and colorful and can be dotted with any number of multicolored stripes, patterns or splotches. Their arms are disproportionately long, reaching past their knees.

TENANT
The spiritual remains of unknown origin whose soul has been bound to an armament of war, modified to contain its host's essence. This process was first attempted by the Jezoriad tribe of Humanity who wished to serve neither Iridess or Mhire in death, but instead continue their battles against monster-kind alongside their own goddess, Althea. This experiment failed, however and no soul-bound Tenants walked this plane during the time of the Jezoriad. This changed after the Ruination; Many of the arms that had been infused with the binding magic had fallen unwittingly into the hands of strangers during the last days of the old world and the Tenants were at long last born.
Physical Description
A Tenant, regardless of the item they are bound to, can project themselves into the physical plane as a humanoid aura; These projections vary greatly in size, build, and general resemblance to the more corporeal tribes of the Mortal Races. Broadly speaking, Tenants appear in their physical forms as faintly glowing (the color also varies) featureless humanoids, their bound item always radiating the same light as their own personal glow.

The Starless Sky You were born under a sky devoid of stars, devoid of any particular destiny; Infinite expanse- infinite possibility.	Exona's Luminance You were born under the brightest night the heavens display, where the stars shine so brightly they illuminate the world in a perpetual twilight all throughout the night. Those born under this rare sky are said to grow into the roles of leaders and kings.	The Amber Lights A rare meteor shower that has been observed since recorded history. It is thought that these lights are the remnants of the comet that split the Twin Moons in two. These stars represent strength and are said to grant those born under them a strong desire to pursue power.	The Black Eclipse The once-yearly configuration of this world's Twin Moons that sees the dark twin completely cover its light counterpart. Births under this eclipse are said to be an omen of sorts: the newborn will have sensitivities to the magical arts but this could manifest in an attraction or phobia.
The White Eclipse The once-yearly configuration of this world's Twin Moons that sees the light twin completely cover its black counterpart. Being born during this event is said to set one on the path of a life of richness- in spirit or in a material sense, who is to say?	The Grand Eclipse An uncommon configuration of this world's Twin Moons that sees both moons eclipse each other as well as the sun itself, casting darkness over the world for several hours. This extremely rare birthsign is said to be a sign that one is chosen by Exona, the god of all gods.	The Rimestar Once every few years a distant blue star shines brighter than any other in the night sky. Those born under this light are said to be chosen by the god, Ronash, god of change. This can be seen as either a curse or a boon to one's future.	Trovanhim's Halo A red star that glows with a halo of light once a year. Those born under this star are said to grow to be exceedingly apt at learning new things and will thrive in academic settings.
The Winter Queen A constellation charted by the earliest Lamiirans that depicts their first queen, Amberil Daetus the Bond-Breaker. Those born under this sign are said to have a heroic fate in which they are destined to perform great feats.	Wrath of the Heavens Swirling clouds of astral dust and flashes of red light from distant collisions hang in the sky above Hirda Allath during this extremely rare cosmological event. Births under this chaos are seen as ill-omens.	Rain of Alanos From high above the world upon the plane of Xon Alanos every few months sacred magic energies spill over the hand of Exona and rain down upon our plane. Those born during this event are said to have pretrunatural luck.	The Seaglow An eerie event in which rays from the outer cosmos rain down causing the Formless Ocean that surrounds this plane to glow an otherworldly green for an entire night. Those born during this event are said to have some psychic connection with the god Ibraeum.
The Trickster A constellation first observed by Gothrin Celestirans said to depict a jester with a knife behind her back. Those born under this arrangement of stars are said to hide the capacity for cunning and violence.	The Twin Archers A constellation charted first by Mazmeri hunters during the Age of Light. It depicts two bowmen taking aim at the same target. This starsign is said to be an omen of an impending untimely demise.	The Eagle King A constellation first charted by the Lamiirans during the Age of Light that resembles a diving eagle. Thousands of years later the Winged Corsairs of the White Crown Dynasty used it as a rallying symbol during their night raids against the Mazmerin Flying Cities.	The Horned Bear A constellation depicting a bear with two great antlers or horns. The discoverer of this star formation has been lost to time but legend has it that those born under it will be long-lived survivors with many scars and stories.
